Happy Tuesday fellow family historians,

This past Saturday, we attended a family reunion for my husband's family. The reunion was held, as per tradition, at Turkey Run State Park. We had a great time at this annual get together, visiting with the elders of my husband's family, now just his two uncles, and the cousins in our own generation. My grandchildren had a wonderful time playing with cousins, and it was my granddaughter's first time to attend at five months of age. Events like this are always bittersweet to me. It's such fun to catch up with everyone, but I think about how many death dates I might be adding before the next reunion. We never know when will be the last time we will see our family.

Family history isn't my only obsession, I also scrapbook. Scrapbooking is another way that I hope to preserve the past and remember our loved ones. Yesterday I came across a sticker sheet that had these words.

How would you use these words to describe your motivation for preserving the history of your family?

Here's how I decided to use these words.

“The history of our ancestors is a treasure that we need to preserve for future generations.”

Please join us at TSGS and learn how to preserve the history of your ancestors.
